Workers in community social services understand the major issues facing women, especially the core causes and impact of growing inequality in Canada. Are you interested in learning more about engaging members to become involved in advocating for change? HSA invites members to join us for a day of training that combines the opportunity to network with other HSA members working in community social services with training specifically focused on women and women's issues.

The BC Federation of Labour's Women's Rights Committee and Canadian Labour Congress are holding a session on how to engage in conversations with members about various issues that are important to all of us as we approach the federal election as we work to build a Canada that works for all women.

As Benda Hildahl from the National Union of Public and General Employees (NUPGE) said: "Women are tired of the lip service politicians give our issues, because they aren't just women's issues. All of these issues have an impact on the economic stability of our communities and our country. We need the leaders to commit to talking directly to women about their concrete plans to resolve increasing inequality."

This is your chance to join Women's Committee members and other women from our unions as we take concrete steps to work for change.
